Bio Formula

4 elements + 12 examples — how to write a bio that makes her want to message you first

4 elements | 12 examples | 3 mistakes

THE FORMULA

A good bio does 3 things — nothing more

It says who you are without listing it. It sparks one thing she can respond to. It leaves her wanting to know more.

> Most bios are a list of adjectives: "adventurous, funny, love to travel." But adjectives without context say nothing. A specific detail says more in one word than three sentences of adjectives.

The Bio Formula: 4 elements

Identity + Contrast + Specific detail + Implicit invitation

Not every bio uses all four — but the best bios have at least 3. Here's what each one does.

ELEMENT 1

Identity — who you are without stating it

Instead of writing "I'm a creative person," show it. Instead of "I love to travel," mention one specific trip or place. Identity through specifics — not adjectives.

✕ WEAK IDENTITY

> "Creative, adventurous, always looking for new experiences."

✓ STRONG IDENTITY

> "Currently reading [book] on the train to nowhere specific."

The word "currently" makes it present and real. The situation says more than the adjective "adventurous."

ELEMENT 2

Contrast — the unexpected side of yourself

Two things that seem contradictory create curiosity. The contrast makes you three-dimensional and hard to categorize.

✓ CONTRAST IN ACTION

> "Engineer by day, bad chef by night."

Two sides. One is professional, one is self-aware humor. Result: a real person, not a LinkedIn profile.

ELEMENT 3

Specific detail — the one thing she can respond to

One unusual, specific detail is enough. It becomes a conversation opener she can use. Generic details ("I like coffee") don't work. Specific ones do.

✓ SPECIFIC DETAIL THAT WORKS

> "Looking for someone who knows the difference between a good Negroni and a great one."

A shared interest that filters matches. She responds if she also knows Negronis. That's a qualified match.

ELEMENT 4

Implicit invitation — without begging

An open question or an invitation that doesn't ask for a date but makes her think about responding. Not "write me" — but an opening she can step through.

✓ IMPLICIT INVITATION

> "Can debate the best coffee in the city — challenge accepted."

She knows what to write. The "challenge accepted" signals you're up for banter, not a formal date.

12 EXAMPLES

Complete bios you can adapt

EXAMPLE 1 — SPORTS + HUMOR

> "Climber on weekends, office hero on weekdays. Currently documenting every bad coffee in the city. Ask me about the worst one."

EXAMPLE 2 — CREATIVE PROFESSION + CONTRAST

> "Writes code by day, reads fiction by night. Convinced that the best conversations happen after the second drink."

EXAMPLE 3 — TRAVEL + SPECIFIC DETAIL

> "Have lived in 3 cities, visited 17 countries. Still haven't found better pasta than in a random Bologna side street. Looking for someone to convince me otherwise."

EXAMPLE 4 — MINIMALIST

> "Architect. Secretly makes the best scrambled eggs in the neighborhood. Judge for yourself."

EXAMPLE 5 — SELF-AWARE HUMOR

> "Height: taller than your ex. Profession: something with computers. Hobby: pretending I haven't seen that movie everyone loves."

EXAMPLE 6 — SPECIFIC INTEREST AS FILTER

> "Can talk about architecture and dogs for hours. If those two things sound boring to you — swipe left. If not — hey."

EXAMPLE 7 — CONTRAST + IMPLICIT INVITATION

> "Data analyst by week, amateur cook by weekend. If you can guess what I'm making from a single ingredient, it's a sign."

EXAMPLE 8 — IDENTITY THROUGH PLACES

> "Found the best coffee in Vienna, the worst hostel in Bangkok, and the most underrated park in my city. Working on the rest."

EXAMPLE 9 — SHORT AND SHARP

> "Journalist. Runs marathons to justify the pasta. Looking for someone who debates things."

EXAMPLE 10 — SELF-DEPRECATING + SPECIFIC

> "Decent at chess, terrible at small talk. If you have a favorite word — I want to know it."

EXAMPLE 11 — MUSIC + SOCIAL PROOF

> "Live music over Spotify. Last concert: [band]. Someone recently told me I have 'good taste in obscure things' — I take that as a compliment."

EXAMPLE 12 — SPORT + HUMOR + INVITATION

> "Cyclist when it's not raining. Amateur wine expert (expert = I've been to France once). Currently looking for someone to argue with about which neighborhood has the best brunch spots."

3 bio mistakes

× List of adjectives without context

"Funny, adventurous, passionate" — without showing it with a specific situation or detail, these words say nothing.

× "Not here for hookups" / "swipe left if..."

Defensive openers create negative energy before you've said anything. Start with something positive.

More than 4 lines

Bio longer than 4 lines signals over-investment. Intrigue leaves things unsaid. Short and specific beats long and exhaustive.
