THE MAGNETIC MAN · OTO 1 · BONUS

The First 5 Messages

An exact sequence for Tinder, Bumble and Hinge — the messages that determine whether a match becomes a date

Tinder | Bumble | Hinge | 5 mistakes

FOUNDATION

4 principles behind every first message

Before the sequence — why it works.

---

1 SPECIFICITY BEATS GENERIC

"Hey" gets ignored. "Your taste in books matches exactly one person I know — a librarian who hiked Kilimanjaro" gets a response. The more specific, the harder it is to ignore.

2 LOW INVESTMENT, HIGH CURIOSITY

The first message shouldn't require much from her — but it should make her curious enough to want to respond. One question, not an essay.

3 SHOW YOU READ HER PROFILE

Referencing something specific from her profile (a detail from her bio, a photo location, a book in the background) immediately separates you from 90% of messages she receives.

4 PURPOSE: BUILD ENOUGH INTEREST FOR A MEETING, NOTHING MORE

Not to be best friends. Not to exchange life stories. Five messages leading toward a concrete meeting — that's the metric.

Tinder — 5-message sequence

Context: she liked you back, you have a match. Time pressure exists — matches expire.

1

Opening — observation or question from her profile

Find one specific detail from her profile and build your opener around it. It shows you looked.

> "I notice you have [specific thing] in the photo — [brief honest observation or question]."
>
> "The [location/activity in photo] — is that [city/region]? Or somewhere else?"

2

After her answer — deepen or contrast

Don't ask another question immediately. Share something about yourself that connects to what she said.

> "Interesting. I had the opposite experience — [brief contrast or your perspective]."

3

Light humor or shared observation

One moment of lightness. A shared observation about something both of you understand from context.

> "Though honestly [self-aware observation about the situation or something from her profile]."

4

Question that opens to a meeting

A question that naturally leads to a concrete location or activity.

> "Do you go to [place/event type] around here often?"
>
> "You mentioned [thing from bio] — is there somewhere specific in the city you'd recommend?"

5

Proposal — specific, direct, without hesitation

If her answer to message 4 shows interest: propose a concrete meeting. Place, time, without overcomplicating.

> "This is a better conversation in person. Thursday 7pm, [specific place]. You coming?"

Bumble — she writes first

The dynamic is different: she opened. Your job is to set the right tone immediately.

On Bumble, her first message is usually generic ("Hey" or "How are you?"). Don't mirror that. Your response immediately sets the level above average.

IF SHE WRITES "HEY" OR "HOW ARE YOU?"

> "Hey — [observation/question from her profile]. What's the story behind [detail]?"

You're not responding to "how are you?" — you're starting a real conversation with something specific. This surprises her and shows caliber.

IF SHE WRITES SOMETHING SPECIFIC

Build on it. If she asked something: answer briefly + redirect to her. If she made a comment: deepen, don't just agree. Continue with the Tinder sequence from message 3.

Hinge — prompts as openers

Hinge prompts are the best conversation starter on the market — use them.

On Hinge you comment on a specific prompt — a photo, answer, or prompt on her profile. This is already a "specific" opener. Your follow-up should deepen it or take it somewhere unexpected.

> "[Her prompt answer] — wait, that means [logical conclusion or funny interpretation]?"

> "I've seen that place/thing too. Didn't expect [unexpected reaction]."

After 2 exchanges on Hinge, suggest moving to WA: "This is better on WhatsApp. Drop me your number." — simple and direct.

WHAT KILLS MATCHES

5 mistakes in the first 5 messages

MISTAKE 1

"Hey" / "Hi" / "What's up?" as an opener. The most common first message. It requires effort from her to start a conversation. She won't make that effort for someone she doesn't know yet.

MISTAKE 2

Complimenting her looks in the first message. "You're beautiful" or "Wow, gorgeous smile" is generic and signals you haven't read her profile. The goal isn't to flatter — it's to intrigue.

MISTAKE 3

Asking too many questions. Three questions at once = an interview. Pick one and ask it. Wait for an answer before continuing.

MISTAKE 4

Not proposing a meeting in the first 5–7 messages. Long app conversations feel good but lead nowhere. The 5-message sequence has a clear goal: a meeting.

MISTAKE 5

"Sorry for the late reply." Apologizing for a response pace you chose signals insecurity. If you replied after 3 hours — it was your time. No explanation needed.

AFTER THE 5 MESSAGES

You have a number. Now the game moves to text.

How to handle WA from first message to a meeting — that's in Texting Without Losing Her. And how to handle the conversation in person — that's in The Language of Magnets.